CRMA Annual Conference

We arrived in Boston on Friday night and checked into the Marriott Boston Copley Place. We're here — or at least I am — for the annual conference of the City and Regional Magazine Association.

These are the people who make, well, magazines for cities and regions. Looking down my list of attendees I see Jayson from Honolulu Magazine, Hudd from Memphis Magazine, Cindy from Plano Profile and Mary from Bangor Metro. Because they're all making magazines in their own little area, they're an oddly cooperative bunch.

My session, at 3:45 p.m. today on the "Production" track is

State of the Blogosphere August 2005 Part 4: Spam and Fake Blogs

SIFRY'S ALERTS — Today I will write about some of the darker sides of the blogosphere, including the increase in spam and fake blogs, comment and trackback spam. Along with the growth in the blogosphere (as reported in parts 1, 2 and 3 last week), Technorati has also been tracking an increase in the number of people who are trying to manipulate the blogosphere.

Live From the Formosa Tea House, Session Four
We recorded Live From the Formosa Tea House: Episode 4 this afternoon over lunch. At the Formosa Tea House. Live.
We recorded in the coveted back room of the Formosa, with a very simple technical setup. We all sat around Dan James' APEX435 microphone, which ran into Steven Garrity's Behringer Eurotrack UB802 mixer. We took the output of the mixer and plugged it into my iMic, which was plugged into a USB port on my laptop. I did the recording in Sound Studio, saved as an AIFF file, then imported the file into iTunes and converted to an MP3 (24 kbps mono, VBR medium quality).
This episode runs one and a half hours. It didn't feel "too long" when we were recording it, so we've decided to release it completely unedited to maintain the "three guys having lunch" feel. It may feel too long to listen to. Things we discuss:
Our technical setup.
Recent travels by Dan to Peru and Peter to France and upcoming travel by Steven to London and Paris (for his honeymoon). [starts 2:42]
London bombings, "terrorists are people too."[starts 28:30]
Steven's Canon PowerShot S330 digital camera motor goes bad [starts 36:0
Queen Street Commons update (and QSC vs. ATC). [starts 37:15]
An extended riff on the differences between employees, entrepreneurs and freelancers, the responsibility to be "open" about what we do, charging for "mind share" vs. "billing by the hour," refusing to write proposals for new projects, "adults don't really know what's going on," how we price our services, how we select our clients. [starts 43:50]

The New New Things

, 2005

The oven timer just dinged and some of the things we've been cooking up in Flickr HQ are ready for serving. If you want to dive right in, check out the new explore page and skip the rest of this post ;)

- First up is clustering, a better way to explore photos through tags. You can still see the most recent photos with a given tag (say, summer) but now you can also root around the finer distinctions: summer beach vacations versus summer flowers and nature - and all the clusters are collected on one page. It's neat!

  Here are some good tags to try: lion, cute, graduation, europe or even one of the classic search disambiguation problems like jaguar or turkey - nicely broken up into the country, the food and the thanksgiving favorite.

- The other new feature is called interestingness and it's huge! A long time in the making, interestingness is a ranking algorithm based on user behavior around the photos taking into account some obvious things like how many users add the photo to their favorites and some subtle things like the relationship between the person who uploaded the photo and the people who are commenting (plus a whole bunch of secret sauce).

  It's huge because we have hundreds of thousands of photos uploaded every day - now we have a way to find the good ones: here are some of the best from December 11th, 2004 or check out this monthly calendar view of March 2005. There's

TONIGHT: PLAZES HITS CHARLOTTETOWN

Peter Rukavina, a strong and dear supporter of Plazes, once again evangelises:

> A reminder: tonight, Wednesday, August 3rd at 7:00 p.m. at the Confederation Centre of the Arts (in the Art Gallery), Felix Petersen, co-founder of Plazes, will drop in via video from Germany to talk about the history, development and future of the system. Felix will answer questions from the audience, so if you're curious about Plazes, or just curious about bootstrapping a web system, bring your thoughts.
> Felix will be followed on the programme by artist Don Gill who will talk about his approach to urban landscapes and his project Erratic Space created during his residency in Charlottetown this summer.
> The event is free.
> It promises to be an interesting night.

Thanks Peter!

So Who Was this "Molly Stark" Woman?

For reasons never fully explained by anyone, Molly Stark is really big in New England today ...

There are dozens of examples I could cite, but perhaps the most puzzling is the legend of Molly Stark. Puzzling because Molly never said anything or did anything of note. However, her husband, New Hampshire General John Stark, said and did a lot of things. It was John who made Molly a legend at the Revolutionary War battle of Bennington, Vermont. "There are the Redcoats," was his battle cry just prior to the battle that morning, "and they are ours, or this night Molly Stark sleeps a widow."

New England Foliage Podcast

PODCASTING IS A NEW way of experiencing audio on the Internet. A podcast is an audio program on the Internet that you can subscribe to with podcast software on your own computer. When new episodes are released, your podcast software can be set to automatically download the audio file and, optionally, to transfer it to your iPod or other portable MP3 player. Think of podcasting as a sort of "automatic VCR for Internet audio."

Podcast Episodes

Watch for new episodes of our podcast throughout the foliage season.

- When the Red Gods Call
- Dos and Don'ts of Foliage
- Autumn in New England - 9/22/05
- Autumn in New England - 9/29/05
- Autumn in New England - 10/6/05

You can learn more about podcasting from Wikipedia and you can find a directory of other podcasts on iPodder.org.

We're making a podcast available of New England Foliage Podcast. The address for this podcast (this is the information your podcast software will require) is:
